

Chapter XXV

An Adventure on the High Road

HE musketeers rode the whole length of the Faubourg Saint Antoine and of the road to Vincennes, and soon found themselves out of the town, then in a forest and then within sight of a village.

The horses seemed to become more lively with each successive step; their nostrils reddened like glowing furnaces. D'Artagnan, freely applying his spurs, was in advance of Porthos two feet at the most; Mousqueton followed two lengths behind; the guards were scattered according to the varying excellence of their respective mounts.

From the top of an eminence D'Artagnan perceived a group of people collected on the other side of the moat, in front of that part of the donjon which looks toward Saint Maur. He rode on, convinced that in this direction he would gain intelligence of the fugitive. In five minutes he had arrived at the place, where the guards joined him, coming up one by one.

The several members of that group were much excited. They looked at the cord, still hanging from the loophole and broken at about twenty feet from the ground. Their eyes measured the height and they exchanged conjectures. On the top of the wall sentinels went and came with a frightened air.

A few soldiers, commanded by a sergeant, drove away idlers from the place where the duke had mounted his horse. D'Artagnan went straight to the sergeant.

'My officer,' said the sergeant, 'it is not permitted to stop here.'

'That prohibition is not for me,' said D'Artagnan. 'Have the fugitives been pursued?'

'Yes, my officer; unfortunately, they are well mounted.'

'How many are there?'

'Four, and a fifth whom they carried away wounded.'

'Four!' said D'Artagnan, looking at Porthos. 'Do you hear, baron? They are only four!'

A joyous smile lighted Porthos's face.

'How long a start have they?'

'Two hours and a quarter, my officer.'

'Two hours and a quarter—that is nothing; we are well mounted, are we not, Porthos?'

Porthos breathed a sigh; he thought of what was in store for his poor horses.

'Very good,' said D'Artagnan; 'and now in what direction did they set out?'

'That I am forbidden to tell.'

D'Artagnan drew from his pocket a paper. 'Order of the king,' he said.

'Speak to the governor, then.'

'And where is the governor?'

'In the country.'

Anger mounted to D'Artagnan's face; he frowned and his cheeks were coloured.

'Ah, you scoundrel!' he said to the sergeant, 'I believe you are impudent to me! Wait!'

He unfolded the paper, presented it to the sergeant with one hand and with the other took a pistol from his holsters and cocked it.

'Order of the king, I tell you. Read and answer, or I will blow out your brains!'

The sergeant saw that D'Artagnan was in earnest. 'The Vendômois road,' he replied.

'And by what gate did they go out?'

'By the Saint Maur gate.'

'If you are deceiving me, rascal, you will be hanged to-morrow.'

'And if you catch up with them you won't come back to hang me,' murmured the sergeant.

D'Artagnan shrugged his shoulders, made a sign to his escort and started.

'This way, gentlemen, this way!' he cried, directing his course toward the gate that had been pointed out.

'And I sign my orders,' said Mazarin, taking a piece of paper and writing some lines; 'Monsieur du Vallon, your barony is on the back of the Duc de Beaufort's horse; you have nothing to do but to overtake it. As for you, my dear lieutenant, I promise you nothing; but if you bring him back to me, dead or alive, you may ask all you wish.'

'To horse, Porthos!' said D'Artagnan, taking his friend by the hand.

'Here I am,' smiled Porthos, with his sublime composure.

They descended the great staircase, taking with them all the guards they found on their road, and crying out, 'To arms! To arms!' and immediately put spur to horse, which set off along the Rue Saint Honoré with the speed of the whirlwind.

'Well, baron, I promise you some good exercise!' said the Gascon.

'Yes, my captain.'

As they went, the citizens, awakened, left their doors and the street dogs followed the cavaliers, barking. At the corner of the Cimetière Saint Jean, D'Artagnan upset a man; it was too insignificant an occurrence to delay people so eager to get on. The troop continued its course as though their steeds had wings.

Alas! there are no unimportant events in this world and we shall see that this apparently slight incident came near endangering the monarchy.

But, now that the duke had escaped, the concierge had seen fit to fasten the gate with a double lock. It was necessary to compel him to open it, as the sergeant had been compelled to speak, and this took another ten minutes. This last obstacle having been overcome, the troop pursued their course with their accustomed ardour; but some of the horses could no longer sustain this pace; three of them stopped after an hour's gallop, and one fell down.

D'Arragnan, who never turned his head, did not perceive it. Porthos told him of it in his calm manner.

'If only we two arrive,' said D'Arragnan, 'it will be enough, since the duke's troop are only four in number.'

'That is true,' said Porthos

And he spurred his courser on.

At the end of another two hours the horses had gone twelve leagues without stopping; their legs began to tremble, and the foam they shed whitened the doublers of their masters.

'Let us rest here an instant to give these poor creatures breathing time,' said Porthos.

'Let us rather kill them! yes, kill them!' cried D'Arragnan; 'I see fresh tracks; 'tis not a quarter of an hour since they passed this place.'

In fact, the road was trodden by horses' feet, visible even in the approaching gloom of evening.

They set out; after a run of two leagues, Mousqueton's horse sank.

'Gracious me!' said Porthos, 'there's Phœbus ruined.'

'The cardinal will pay you a hundred pistoles.'

'I'm above that.'

'Let us set out again, at full gallop.'

'Yes, if we can.'

But at last the lieutenant's horse refused to go on; he could not breathe; one last spur, instead of making him advance, made him fall.

'The devil!' exclaimed Porthos; 'there's Vulcan foundered.'

'Zounds!' cried D'Arragnan, 'then we must stop! Give me your horse, Porthos. What the devil are you doing?'

'By Jove, I am falling, or rather, Bayard is falling,' answered Porthos.

All three then cried: 'All's over.'

'Hush!' said D'Arragnan.

'It is a long time since we have had a battle, eh, Porthos?'

'What is it?'

'I hear a horse.'

'It belongs to one of our companions, who is overtaking us.'

'No,' said D'Artagnan, 'it is in advance.'

'That is another thing,' said Porthos; and he listened toward the quarter indicated by D'Artagnan.

'Monsieur,' said Mousqueton, who, abandoning his horse on the high road, had come on foot to rejoin his master, 'Phœbus could no longer hold out and—'

'Silence!' said Porthos.

In fact, at that moment a second neighing was borne to them on the night wind.

'It is five hundred feet from here, in advance,' said D'Artagnan.

'True, monsieur,' said Mousqueton; 'and five hundred feet from here is a small hunting-house.'

'Mousqueton, thy pistols,' said D'Artagnan.

'I have them at hand, monsieur.'

'Porthos, take yours from your holsters.'

'I have them.'

'Good!' said D'Artagnan, seizing his own; 'now you understand, Porthos?'

'Not too well.'

'We are out on the king's service.'

'Well?'

'For the king's service we need horses.'

'That is true,' said Porthos.

'Then not a word, but set to work!'

They went on through the darkness, silent as phantoms; they saw a light glimmering in the midst of some trees.

'Yonder is the house, Porthos,' said the Gascon; 'let me do what I please and do you what I do.'

They glided from tree to tree till they arrived at twenty steps from the house unperceived and saw by means of a lantern suspended under a hut, four fine horses. A groom was rubbing them down; near them were saddles and bridles.

D'Artagnan approached quickly, making a sign to his two companions to remain a few steps behind.

Mazarin uttered a cry and became paler than the man who had brought the news. He fell back, almost fainting, in his chair.

'Escaped? Monsieur de Beaufort escaped?'

'My lord, I saw him run off from the top of the terrace.'

'And you did not fire on him?'

'He was out of range.'

'Monsieur de Chavigny—where was he?'

'Absent.'

'And La Ramée?'

'Was found locked up in the prisoner's room, a gag in his mouth and a poniard near him.'

'But the man who was under him?'

'Was an accomplice of the duke's and escaped along with him.'

Mazarin groaned.

'My lord,' said D'Artagnan, advancing toward the cardinal, 'it seems to me that your eminence is losing precious time. It may still be possible to overtake the prisoner. France is large; the nearest frontier is sixty leagues distant.'

'And who is to pursue him?' cried Mazarin.

'I, pardieu!'

'And you would arrest him?'

'Why not?'

'You would arrest the Duc de Beaufort, armed, in the field?'

'If your eminence should order me to arrest the devil, I would seize him by the horns and would bring him in.'

'So would I,' said Porthos.

'So would you!' said Mazarin, looking with astonishment at those two men. 'But the duke will not yield himself without a furious battle.'

'Very well,' said D'Artagnan, his eyes aflame, 'battle! It is a long time since we have had a battle, eh, Porthos?'

'Battle!' cried Porthos.

'And you think you can catch him?'

'Yes, if we are better mounted than he.'

'Go then, take what guards you find here, and pursue him.'

'You command us, my lord, to do so?'

'My lord,' said D'Artagnan, 'it is twenty years since Cardinal de Richelieu made me lieutenant.'

'Yes, and you would be gratified if Cardinal Mazarin should make you captain.'

D'Artagnan bowed.

'Well, that is not impossible. We will see, gentlemen, we will see. Now, Monsieur de Vallon,' said Mazarin, 'what service do you prefer, in the town or in the country?'

Porthos opened his mouth to reply.

'My lord,' said D'Artagnan, 'Monsieur de Vallon is like me, he prefers service extraordinary—that is to say, enterprises that are considered mad and impossible.'

That boastfulness was not displeasing to Mazarin; he fell into meditation.

'And yet,' he said, 'I must admit that I sent for you to appoint you to quiet service; I have certain apprehensions—well, what is the meaning of that?'

In fact, a great noise was heard in the ante-chamber; at the same time the door of the study was burst open and a man, covered with dust, rushed into it, exclaiming:

'My lord the cardinal! my lord the cardinal!'

Mazarin thought that some one was going to assassinate him and he drew back, pushing his chair on the castors. D'Artagnan and Porthos moved so as to plant themselves between the person entering and the cardinal.

'Well, sir,' exclaimed Mazarin, 'what's the matter? and why do you rush in here, as if you were about to penetrate a crowded market-place?'

'My lord,' replied the messenger, 'I wish to speak to your eminence in secret. I am Monsieur du Poin, an officer in the guards, on duty at the donjon of Vincennes.'

Mazarin, perceiving by the paleness and agitation of the messenger that he had something of importance to say, made a sign that D'Artagnan and Porthos should give place.

D'Artagnan and Porthos withdrew to a corner of the cabinet.

'Speak, monsieur, speak at once!' said Mazarin 'What is the matter?'

'The matter is, my lord, that the Duc de Beaufort has contrived to escape from the Château of Vincennes.'

'I buy those horses,' he said to the groom.

The groom turned toward him with a look of surprise, but made no reply.

'Didn't you hear, fellow?'

'Yes, I heard.'

'Why, then, didn't you reply?'

'Because these horses are not to be sold,' was the reply.

'I take them, then,' said the lieutenant.

And he took hold of one within his reach; his two companions did the same thing.

'Sir,' cried the groom, 'they have traversed six leagues and have only been unsaddled half an hour.'

'Half an hour's rest is enough,' replied the Gascon.

The groom cried aloud for help. A kind of steward appeared, just as D'Artagnan and his companions were prepared to mount. The steward attempted to expostulate.

'My dear friend,' cried the lieutenant, 'if you say a word I will blow out your brains.'

'But, sir,' answered the steward, 'do you know that these horses belong to Monsieur de Montbazon?'

'So much the better; they must be good animals, then.'

'Sir, I shall call my people.'

'And I, mine; I've ten guards behind me, don't you hear them gallop? and I'm one of the king's musketeers. Come, Porthos, come, Mousqueton.'

They all mounted the horses as quickly as possible.

'Halloo! hi! hi!' cried the steward, 'the house servants, with the carbines!'

'On! on!' cried D'Artagnan; 'there'll be firing! on!'

They all set off, swift as the wind.

'Here!' cried the steward, 'here!' whilst the groom ran to a neighbouring building.

'Take care of your horses!' cried D'Artagnan to him.

'Fire!' replied the steward.

A gleam, like a flash of lightning, illumined the road, and with the flash was heard the whistling of balls, which were fired wildly in the air.

'They fire like grooms,' said Porthos. 'In the time of the cardinal people fired better than that, do you remember the road to Crèvecoeur, Mousqueton?'

'Ah, sir! my left side still pains me!'

'Are you sure we are on the right track, lieutenant?'

'Egad, didn't you hear? these horses belong to Monsieur de Montbazon; well, Monsieur de Montbazon is the husband of Madame de Montbazon—'

'And—'

'And Madame de Montbazon is the mistress of the Duc de Beaufort.'

'Ah! I understand,' replied Porthos, 'she has ordered relays of horses.'

'Exactly so.'

'And we are pursuing the duke with the very horses he has just left?'

'My dear Porthos, you are really a man of most superior understanding,' said D'Artagnan, with a look as if he spoke against his conviction.

'Pooh!' replied Porthos, 'I am what I am.'

They rode on for an hour, till the horses were covered with foam and dust.

'Zounds! what is yonder?' cried D'Artagnan.

'You are very lucky if you see anything such a night as this,' said Porthos.

'Something bright.'

'I, too,' cried Mousqueton, 'saw them also.'

'Ah! ah! have we overtaken them?'

'Good! a dead horse!' said D'Artagnan, pulling up his horse, which shied; it seems their horses, too, are breaking down, as well as ours.'

'I seem to hear the noise of a troop of horsemen,' exclaimed Porthos, leaning over his horse's mane.

'Impossible.'

'They appear to be numerous.'

'Then 'tis something else.'

'Another horse!' said Porthos.

'Dead?'

'No, dying.'

'Saddled?'

'Yes, saddled and bridled.'

'Then we are upon the fugitives.'

'Courage, we have them!'

'But if they are numerous,' observed Mousqueton, 'tis not we who have them, but they who have us.'

Porthos opened his mouth, thinking it a good opportunity to put in a word in his turn; D'Artagnan checked him by a glance from the corner of his eye.

'They are prevented at this moment, but will join us later.'

Mazarin coughed a little.

'And this gentleman, being disengaged, takes to the service willingly?' he asked.

'Yes, my lord, and from pure devotion to the cause, for Monsieur de Bracieux is rich.'

'Rich?' said Mazarin, whom that single word always inspired with a great respect.

'Fifty thousand francs a year,' said Porthos.

These were the first words he had spoken.

'From pure zeal?' resumed Mazarin, with his artful smile; 'from pure zeal and devotion then?'

'My lord has, perhaps, no faith in those words?' said D'Artagnan.

'Have you, Monsieur le Gascon?' asked Mazarin, supporting his elbows on his desk and his chin on his hands.

'I,' replied the Gascon, 'I believe in devotion as a word at one's baptism, for instance, which naturally comes before one's proper name; every one is naturally more or less devout, certainly; but there should be at the end of one's devotion something to gain.'

'And your friend, for instance, what does he expect to have at the end of his devotion?'

'Well, my lord, my friend has three magnificent estates: that of Vallon, at Corbeil; that of Bracieux, in the Soissonais; and that of Pierrefonds, in the Valois. Now, my lord, he would like to have one of his three estates erected into a barony.'

'Only that?' said Mazarin, his eyes twinkling with joy on seeing that he could pay for Porthos's devotion without opening his purse; 'only that? That can be managed.'

'I shall be baron!' explained Porthos, stepping forward.

'I told you so,' said D'Artagnan, checking him with his hand; 'and now his eminence confirms it.'

'And you, Monsieur D'Artagnan, what do you want?'

these two cavaliers; one as fresh as if he had come out of a bandbox, the other so covered with dust that he looked as if he had but just come off a field of battle.

Mousqueton also attracted attention; and as the romance of Don Quixote was then the fashion, they said that he was Sancho, who, after having lost one master, had found two.

On reaching the palace, D'Arragnan sent to his eminence the letter in which he had been ordered to return without delay. He was soon ordered to the presence of the cardinal.

'Courage!' he whispered to Porthos, as they proceeded. 'Do not be intimidated. Believe me, the eye of the eagle is closed forever. We have only the vulture to deal with. Hold yourself as bolt upright as on the day of the bastion of St Gervais, and do not bow too low to this Italian; that might give him a poor idea of you.'

'Good!' answered Porthos. 'Good!'

Mazarin was in his study, working at a list of pensions and benefices, of which he was trying to reduce the number. He saw D'Arragnan and Porthos enter with internal pleasure, yet showed no joy in his countenance.

'Ah! you, is it? Monsieur le lieutenant, you have been very prompt. 'Tis well. Welcome to ye.'

'Thanks, my lord. Here I am at your eminence's service, as well as Monsieur du Vallon, one of my old friends, who used to conceal his nobility under the name of Porthos.'

Porthos bowed to the cardinal.

'A magnificent cavalier,' remarked Mazarin.

Porthos turned his head to the right and to the left, and drew himself up with a movement full of dignity.

'The best swordsman in the kingdom, my lord,' said D'Arragnan.

Porthos bowed to his friend.

Mazarin was as fond of fine soldiers as, in later times, Frederick of Prussia used to be. He admired the strong hands, the broad shoulders and the steady eye of Porthos. He seemed to see before him the salvation of his administration and of the kingdom, sculptured in flesh and bone. He remembered that the old association of musketeers was composed of four persons.

'And your two other friends?' he asked.

'Nonsense!' cried D'Arragnan, 'they'll suppose us to be stronger than themselves, as we're in pursuit; they'll be afraid and will disperse.'

'Certainly,' remarked Porthos.

'Ah! do you see?' cried the lieutenant.

'The lights again! this time I, too, saw them,' said Porthos.

'On! on! forward! forward!' cried D'Arragnan, in his stentorian voice; 'we shall laugh over all this in five minutes.'

And they darted on anew. The horses, excited by pain and emulation, raced over the dark road, in the midst of which was now seen a moving mass, denser and more obscure than the rest of the horizon.

'Tis the same thing—you understand me, D'Artagnan—a court.'

'There's no court now. Alas!'

'The queen!'

'I was going to say, there's no longer a queen. The queen! Rest assured, we shall not see her.'

'And you say that we are going from here to the Palais Royal?'

'Immediately. Only, that there may be no delay, I shall borrow one of your horses.'

'Certainly; all the four are at your service.'

'Oh, I need only one of them for the time being.'

'Shall we take our valets?'

'Yes, you may as well take Mousqueton. As to Planchet, he has certain reasons for not going to court.'

'And what are they?'

'Oh, he doesn't stand well with his eminence.'

'Mouston,' said Porthos, 'saddle Vulcan and Bayard.'

'And for myself, monsieur, shall I saddle Rustaud?'

'No, take a more stylish horse, Phcebus or Superbe; we are going with some ceremony.'

'Ah,' said Mousqueton, breathing more freely, 'you are only going, then, to make a visit?'

'Oh! yes, of course, Mouston; nothing else. But to avoid risk, put the pistols in the holsters. You will find mine on my saddle, already loaded.'

Mouston breathed a sigh; he couldn't understand visits of ceremony made under arms.

'Indeed,' said Porthos, looking complacently at his old lackey as he went away, 'you are right, D'Artagnan; Mouston will do; Mouston has a very fine appearance.'

D'Artagnan smiled.

'But you, my friend—are you not going to change your dress?'

'No, I shall go as I am. This travelling dress will serve to show the cardinal my haste to obey his commands.'

They set out on Vulcan and Bayard, followed by Mousqueton on Phcebus, and arrived at the Palais Royal at about a quarter to seven. The streets were crowded, for it was the day of Pentecost, and the crowd looked in wonder at

The pretty Madeleine, who had approached during this colloquy, stepped back and turned pale as death on hearing Porthos's words, for she thought the scene with the Swiss was about to be repeated. But to her great surprise D'Arragnan remained perfectly calm, and instead of being angry he laughed, and said to Porthos:

'Yes, I understand, the air of La Rue Tiquetonne is not like that of Pierre-fonds; but console yourself, I will soon conduct you to one much better.'

'When will you do that?'

'Immediately, I hope.'

'Ah! so much the better!'

To that exclamation of Porthos's succeeded a groaning, low and profound, which seemed to come from behind a door. D'Arragnan, who had just dismounted, then saw, outlined against the wall, the enormous stomach of Mousqueton, whose down-drawn mouth emitted sounds of distress.

'And you, too, my poor Monsieur Mouston, are out of place in this poor hôtel, are you not?' asked D'Arragnan, in that rallying tone which may indicate either compassion or mockery.

'He finds the cooking detestable,' replied Porthos.

'Why, then, doesn't he attend to it himself, as at Chantilly?'

'Ah, monsieur, I have not here, as I had there, the ponds of monsieur le prince, where I could catch those beautiful carp, nor the forests of his highness to provide me with partridges. As for the cellar, I have searched every part and poor stuff I found.'

'Monsieur Mouston,' said D'Arragnan, 'I should indeed condole with you had I not at this moment something very pressing to attend to.'

Then taking Porthos aside:

'My dear Du Vallon,' he said, 'here you are in full dress most fortunately, for I am going to take you to the cardinal's.'

'Gracious me! really?' exclaimed Porthos, opening his great wondering eyes.

'Yes, my friend.'

'A presentation? indeed!'

'Does that alarm you?'

'No, but it agitates me.'

'Oh! don't be distressed; you have to deal with a cardinal of another kind. This one will not oppress you by his dignity.'

Chapter XXVI

The Rencontre

HEY rode on in this way for ten minutes. Suddenly two dark forms seemed to separate from the mass, advanced, grew in size, and as they loomed up larger and larger, assumed the appearance of two horsemen.

'Aha!' cried D'Arragnan, 'they're coming toward us.'

'So much the worse for them,' said Porthos.

'Who goes there?' cried a hoarse voice.

The three horsemen made no reply, stopped not, and all that was heard was the noise of swords drawn from the scabbards and the cocking of the pistols with which the two phantoms were armed.

'Bridle in mouth!' said D'Arragnan.

Porthos understood him and he and the lieutenant each drew with the left hand a pistol from their bolsters and cocked it in their turn.

'Who goes there?' was asked a second time. 'Not a step forward, or you're dead men.'

'Stuff!' cried Porthos, almost choked with dust and chewing his bridle as a horse chews his bit. 'Stuff and nonsense; we have seen plenty of dead men in our time.'

Hearing these words, the two shadows blockaded the road and by the light of the stars might be seen the shining of their arms.

'Back!' shouted D'Arragnan, 'or you are dead!'

Two shots were the reply to this threat; but the assailants attacked their foes with such velocity that in a moment they were upon them; a third pistol-shot was heard, aimed by D'Arragnan, and one of his adversaries fell. As for Porthos, he assaulted the foe with such violence that, although his sword was thrust aside, the enemy was thrown off his horse and fell about ten steps from it.

'Finish, Mouston, finish the work!' cried Porthos. And he darted on beside his friend, who had already begun a fresh pursuit.

'Well?' said Porthos.

'I've broken my man's skull,' cried D'Artagnan. 'And you—'
'I've only thrown the fellow down, but hark!'

Another shot of a carbine was heard. It was Mousqueton, who was obeying his master's command.

'On! on!' cried D'Artagnan; 'all goes well! we have the first throw.'

'Ha! ha!' answered Porthos, 'behold, other players appear.'

And in fact, two other cavaliers made their appearance, detached, as it seemed, from the principal group; they again disputed the road.

This time the lieutenant did not wait for the opposite party to speak.

'Stand aside!' he cried; 'stand off the road!'

'What do you want?' asked a voice.

'The duke!' Porthos and D'Artagnan roared out both at once.

A burst of laughter was the answer, but finished with a groan. D'Artagnan had, with his sword, cut in two the poor wretch who had laughed.

At the same time Porthos and his adversary fired on each other and D'Artagnan turned to him.

'Bravo! you've killed him, I think.'

'No, wounded his horse only.'

'What would you have, my dear fellow? One doesn't hit the bull's-eye every time; it is something to hit inside the ring. Ho! parbleu! what is the matter with my horse?'

'Your horse is falling,' said Porthos, reining in his own.

In truth, the lieutenant's horse stumbled and fell on his knees; then a rattling in his throat was heard and he lay down to die. He had received in the chest the bullet of D'Artagnan's first adversary. D'Artagnan swore loud enough to be heard in the skies.

'Does your honour want a horse?' asked Mousqueton.

'Zounds! want one!' cried the Gascon.

'Here's one, your honour—'

Chapter XXIV

The Timely Arrival of D'Artagnan in Paris

AT Blois, D'Artagnan received the money paid to him by Mazarin for any future service he might render the cardinal.

From Blois to Paris was a journey of four days for ordinary travellers, but D'Artagnan arrived on the third day at the Barrière Saint Denis. In turning the corner of the Rue Montmartre, in order to reach the Rue Tiquetonne and the Hôtel de 'la Chevrete', where he had appointed Porthos to meet him, he saw at one of the windows of the hôtel, that friend himself dressed in a sky-blue waistcoat, embroidered with silver, and gaping; till he showed every one of his white teeth, whilst the people passing by admiringly gazed at this gentleman, so handsome and so rich, who seemed to weary of his riches and his greatness.

D'Artagnan and Planchet had hardly turned the corner when Porthos recognised them.

'Eh! D'Artagnan!' he cried. 'Thank God you have come!'

'Eh! good-day, dear friend!' replied D'Artagnan.

Porthos came down at once to the threshold of the hôtel.

'Ah, my dear friend!' he cried, 'what bad stabling for my horses here.'

'Indeed!' said D'Artagnan; 'I am most unhappy to hear it, on account of those fine animals.'

'And I, also—I was also wretchedly off,' he answered, moving backward and forward as he spoke; 'and had it not been for the hostess,' he added, with his air of vulgar self-complacency, 'who is very agreeable and understands a joke, I should have got a lodging elsewhere.'
